Chicago Public Library to Receive 2014 National Medal for Museum and Library Service

National Award Recognizes Exceptional Contributions of Chicago, IL Library

WASHINGTON (April 24, 2014) – The Institute of Museum and Library Services today announced Chicago Public Library is one of 10 recipients of this year's National Medal for Museum and Library Service. The National Medal, the nation's highest honor conferred on museums and libraries for service to the community, has celebrated 20 years of institutions that make a difference for individuals, families, and communities. The National Medal will be presented at an event in Washington, D.C., on May 8.

Chicago Public Library continues to expand its services for patrons of all ages in innovative ways. Its new Maker Lab allows the public free, hands-on experience with 3D design software, 3D printers, and other 21st century tools. The library also expanded its YOUMedia digital learning opportunities for teens, and revamped the 2013 Summer Learning Challenge, which offered kids more ways to participate in creative learning activities and saw a record 71,000 children participate. Patrons have access to both physical and digital resources at all 80 locations and, as Alarm Press editor in chief and founder Chris Force found, access to valuable librarian knowledge and expertise.

When building his business, Chris learned about the magazine industry through Chicago Public Library resources and used the library as his business incubator, booking meeting rooms and using the free databases to source leads. “The staff at Chicago Public Library is fantastic. Along with being knowledgeable, they’re very supportive—and sometimes as a small business owner all you need is anyone, even your local librarian, to give you some encouragement. Chicago is a great city for that, and the CPL is great resource for any small business owner.” Force’s belief in the value of the library extends to his staff – he insists that all Alarm Press employees obtain a Chicago Public Library card when they are hired.

“Congratulations to the 2014 winners of the National Medal for Museum and Library Service. From programs that foster passion for science, literature and cultural heritage, to critical 21st century skills training for improved educational outcomes and workforce readiness, the services and programs of these institutions truly do make a difference,” said Susan H. Hildreth, director of the Institute of Museum and Library Services. “We thank each of this year’s medal recipients for their innovation and their dedication to serving their communities.”

Chicago Public Library Commissioner Brian Bannon will be traveling to Washington, D.C., to accept the National Medal. He states, “We are dedicated to serving as Chicago’s hub for free access to information, inspiration and the ideas of the day, and want to thank IMLS for this national recognition of the work we are doing.” Chris Force will travel to Washington with Bannon and share the impact the Chicago Public Library has had on his life as a small business owner during the May 8 celebration.

The ten honorees exemplify the nation’s great diversity of libraries and museums and include a natural history museum, a children’s museum, a natural sciences museum, an aquarium, a botanic garden, public library systems, and a book center, hailing from ten states.

Winners of the National Medal were selected from nationwide nominations of institutions that demonstrate innovative approaches to public service, exceeding the expected levels of community outreach. The award will be presented during a celebration in Washington, D.C. on May 8. After the ceremony, StoryCorps – a national nonprofit dedicated to recording, preserving, and sharing the stories of Americans – will visit to document stories from the community.
